

I think the Baltimore-based Sinclair Broadcast Group is abusing the privilege it has been granted for use of public airwaves. Editorial control is being left just to one extreme right-wing point of view. Sinclair controls the only local television station in my area - I'm not sure why the FCC feels it is acceptable to provide access to public airways to a company that has a singular political agenda. I do not think Sinclair's license should be renewed until they have agreed to offer a more diverse editorial point of view. To do anything less is a slap in the face of a critical component in making democracy work in this information dominated electronic age.
